UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIAL.
SEPTEMBER 26, 1894.

GENTLEMEN,
Before leaving Ipswich, I wish to write a few words of thanks for the care and attention shown in the Removal of my Furniture; your men were most obliging, and certainly thoroughly understand the work. I was much pleased, not only with their quickness, but with the very quiet way in which they cleared the house.

A TRUE BOON.

THE Cynic and Fool says:—"There is nothing new under the sun," but never was a more egregious mistake made. For instance, take the vast strides that have been made within the last decade in Chemistry, and by the Surgical and Medical Profession and the thousands of cures effected that were thought impossible a few years back.

Especially is this noticeable in the case of the Animal World. A few years ago it was a common thing to hear of the slaughter of valuable animals for the slightest accident which is now looked upon as only a temporary ailment that can be cured in a few days; and what is the principal secret of this saving of Animal Life? Nothing more or less than the discovery of Mr. Henry of his wonderful WHITE OILS, CONDITION POWDERS, and DRINKS for

CHAPTER IX.

A DOMESTIC EARTHQUAKE.

PERHAPS Lizzie had been expecting Robert Johnson; perhaps it was a mere coincidence, or a lover's intuition; certain it is, at all events, that she was standing at the window of the boudoir, on the first floor, as he came up the avenue; and that she ran downstairs and had the door open before he could touch the bell.

This front door itself approached through a covered portico, or small ante-room, open to the street, but yet sufficiently protected from it to allow of a little ceremony being transacted there which left Lizzie with a pair of very rosy cheeks. Then she two entered the hall demurely, and softly closed the door after them.

The hall, like the halls of most New York houses, was dark, being lighted only from the fanlight above the door. It was about eight feet in width, on the left was a door opening into the front drawing-room, which again communicated by folding doors with another room beyond it. On the right side of the hall, opposite the drawing-room door, was a hat-stand, and in the midst of the hat-stand, which surrounded it like a frame, was a large mirror, six feet high by four feet in breadth.

Now it so happened that the drawing-room front-door window and the mirror in the hall, therefore, also opposite the looking-glass in the hat-stand, and there was another looking-glass on the mantelpiece above the fire-place. Consequently (to come to the upshot of all this topographical description) an observer stationed in the hall and facing the hat-rack could see reflected in that mirror the mirror over the mantel-piece, and in that, not only most of the drawing-room, but, when the folding doors were open, a part of the rear-room likewise. Whether or not this arrangement was intentional, it was at all events very convenient for our two persons in the hall, if such there happened to be, and Mr. Robert Johnson might, at this moment, be classed in this category.

Mr. Johnson and Lizzie Pond were standing in front of the hat-rack, and the former was asking the latter how she had been since he saw her last, when his eyes caught the reflection of something in the mirror which caused the question to die away upon his lips. He silently directed Lizzie's attention to what he saw, and they both contemplated it with varying emotions of astonishment and perplexity.

The spectacle which thus attracted them consisted of two persons, who were standing together in the rear drawing-room. One was a woman, the other a man. The woman was Mrs. Desmond. The man was unknown to Johnson.

He was under the medium height, with a thick growth of black hair on his head, black, quick eyes, and a swarthy complexion. His dress was plain, and his appearance that of a man of the lower class.

Robert and Lizzie saw Mrs. Desmond, the great lady, the refined and beautiful woman, throw her arms round the neck of this man, and kiss him on either cheek; and then saw the man return her caress. Then they held each other by both hands, and conversed in low tones barely audible to the spectators in the hall-way.

"Lizzie," said Robert, in a whisper, "have you seen anything like that before?"

"Never—never! Can you believe it?" replied Lizzie, with manifest agitation.

"Do you know that man?"

"No, I do not. I have been several times: I believe he used to be a servant here, before I came."

Has he ever been here when Colonel Desmond was in the house?"

"I think not."

"Very well. I shall find out about him. Meanwhile, you forward to you is this: Take this letter"—he put the colonel's note in her hand—"and give it to Mrs. Desmond. Be sure you notice how she looks and what she says when she reads it. Soon after reading it she will probably put on her bonnet and go out. I want you to find out whether she goes in the horse-cars or walks, and what kind of a bonnet and cloak she wears, and carries it with her when she goes out. If so, tell me what it is. That will be the present. I will explain another time. That fellow is leaving now, and I want to see more of him. Good-bye!"

"Oh, Robert, this has made me so unhappy!"

"Why, my dear girl? Why should anyone in this world are as good as you are, and you mustn't expect it."

With this Robert withdrew, as noiselessly as he had entered, and running down the steps crossed to the other side of the avenue and waited. In a few moments the Desmonds' door opened and the unknown man issued forth. He was a good-looking fellow enough, but decidedly he belonged to the lower orders. He was probably between thirty-five and forty. His black clothes, evidently his best, fitted him ill, and were not in the fashion. As he came down the steps, he was fitting on his head a silk hat that appeared to be too small for him. Robert Johnson said to himself that the man looked like a French cook in his Sunday attire. "If it is, I fear for Mrs. Desmond!"

The man, upon reaching the sidewalk, turned southward and walked at a brisk pace, with his head down and his plump hands swinging at his sides. Johnson kept along with him on the other side of the avenue. So they continued for about half a mile, which brought them to the Delmonico corner, on Twenty-sixth-street. Here the man turned to the right, and the Englishman followed him.

They crossed Broadway, and still keeping westward, traversed the block between Broadway and Fifth-avenue. On reaching the latter thoroughfare the man, with Johnson still behind him, on the north side of the street, crossed diagonally over to the south side and kept on. At about the middle of the block, on this side, was a superannuated house, painted white, and dingy with years and weather, and with a little portico jutting out in front of it. The man entered this house, over the door of which was inscribed, "Louis Hanier, Licensed Vendor of Wines and Liquors," and Robert Johnson unhesitatingly followed him.

As he went in he saw the man standing behind the counter. He was just hanging up his hat and overcoat. Evidently he was the proprietor—he was Louis Hanier. "What good women are, to be sure!" remarked Mr. Johnson to himself.

It was Friday, the 28th of December. Within thirty-six hours of that time, as we know, Louis Hanier would be a dead man; but Robert Johnson, who did not share our prophetic vision, contemplated him with a different sort of interest.

"What can I serve you, sir?" asked Hanier, turning and seeing Johnson at the counter.

"Hum! Give me—I'll take a glass of your liqueur—and I shall like it if you'll join me, Mr. Hanier," replied the other. The wine dealer bowed and smiled, and produced a bottle and two glasses. "You will find this very good," he said.

"I fancy you know the right thing: I've been told you are a connoisseur," returned Johnson.

"Well, I have had experience. But who told you that?"

"Oh, a lady—an acquaintance of mine—Mrs. Desmond," said Johnson, fixing his eyes on his Frenchman. Hanier looked aside in a transparent embarrassment. "She spoke very highly of you—of your taste and so forth," continued the other.

"You are acquainted with her, you say?" inquired Hanier, looking up.

"I have some business relations with Colonel Desmond, and see the lady occasionally. You had some connection with the family, I believe?"

Hanier started, but recovered himself immediately. "Oh, yes, I had a connection in the way of the wine-cellar in Colonel Desmond's house—as butler, in fact," he said hurriedly.

"Ah, precisely! and a very nice house it is, too—they manage things very well there. Mrs. Desmond is a French woman by birth; one doesn't often see a handsomer lady."

"Elle est très bien—she is very good indeed," said Hanier, tasting his liquor.

"I'm surprised you should have wanted to leave a place like that; I should have fancied you'd have found it uncommonly comfortable there," pursued the Englishman.

"One cannot do always as one would wish: there were reasons, you comprehend. For me, I have a family—a wife and six children. One cannot maintain such a family in the house of one's employer; on the other side, it is inconvenient that they should live alone. There comes an opportunity to purchase a small business; I purchase it, and—voilà tout!" said Hanier, shrugging his shoulders.

"The colonel must have been sorry to lose you," observed Johnson, with a sharp look. "I suppose he has you there to oversee things whenever he gives a big dinner or anything of that kind?"

"No—no; I do not—that is, my business occupies me too much," replied the Frenchman, somewhat uneasily. At that moment some customers entered the shop, and Hanier turned to them quickly with a perceptible air of relief. Johnson left the shop.

"It's a plain case enough," he said to himself. "There is no politics or society-business about this. The fellow is her lover—neither more nor less; and the colonel has found it out, and has—that's all! Well, I don't see that anything is to be made out of that. As she doesn't know her husband's secrets it's no use discovering her with exposure unless she tells them. Still, it's as well to have a hold on her; she might be of use in some way. Meanwhile I must keep an eye on the colonel. This affair is coming to a head!"

Thus muttering he reached the corner of Fifth-avenue, when he came to a stop. "I shall have to get Lizzie to-morrow to find out what I can as well arrange for it now. She will be alone; Mrs. Desmond must have gone down town by this time." He turned his steps to the Desmonds' house, and was admitted to an audience with Lizzie. Mrs. Desmond had just gone out.

"Well, did she carry anything with her?" inquired Johnson.

"Nothing that I could see," Lizzie replied. "I gave her the letter, and was in the room while she read it. She gave an exclamation and seemed very much troubled. She walked up and down the room, tearing the letter up, and threw the pieces in the fire. Then she stood looking out of the window, and biting her lips in a way she does sometimes when she is troubled. By-and-bye she looked at her watch and said, 'Oh, it's too late: I shan't have time.' Then she told me to bring her things, for she was going right out. I helped her put them on, and I'm sure she didn't carry anything with her when she went. Oh, Robert, what do you suppose it is?" broke off the girl in a piteous voice. "I can't get over that thing we saw; I can't believe she did it, though I was her—she was always so good and indulgent! Do you think he can have found out anything, and be going to punish her?"

"As to that, I can't say," Robert replied, disappointedly. "I should say Desmond makes a fool of herself like that with a French butler she must expect to get a facer now and then. However, I don't believe there was anything in the letter likely to alarm her on that score. It must have been another matter altogether—at least, that's my opinion. Well, my dear, what I want to say to you is this: You must do what you can to learn what sort of terms they are on with each other after this. It looks now as if there was something wrong going on; and if that's the case it may be necessary to get you out of the house. I'm not the means of getting you here: but I don't intend to let you stay if it's not a proper place for you. If they go out to-morrow evening find where they are going, and as soon as they're out of the house bring a white handkerchief out of the boudoir window. I'll be on the watch and will come in and hear the news."

Having delivered these instructions, Robert departed about his business, whatever that may have been. The following evening, Saturday, December 29, Mrs. Desmond and the colonel went out to dinner; and Lizzie, like the good but romantic girl she was, hung her handkerchief out of the boudoir window and sat down inside like a medieval maiden in her tower to watch for the appearance of her knight.

Before long she heard the bell ring and Robert asking the servant who opened the door whether the colonel was at home? and then saying that he had an important message for him from the office —and if Miss Pond were in he would intrust it to her. All this, of course, was mere diplomacy on Robert's part to avert suspicion of anything personal in his relations with Miss Pond, and probably had the success that generally attends diplomacy of that kind. But at all events Lizzie came down and had an interview with Robert in the hall.

And this time she had a more stirring story to tell. Mrs. Desmond had come home late to dress the night before and had eaten little or nothing, appearing to be in a very depressed and anxious frame of mind; she had then gone up to her room and had remained there all the evening alone until the colonel came home. After his arrival there was a great deal of talking done, whereof Lizzie heard very little—only one sentence, indeed, reaching her ears in its entirety. "It must be found!" the colonel exclaimed with great emphasis. "I tell you I wouldn't lose it for ten thousand dollars—no, not for a hundred thousand!" Nothing decisive seemed to happen, however, until the next morning. The colonel was up early: seemed to be searching for something all over the rooms on the bedroom floor. At last he entered his wife's room and had some conversation with her. At first no more than a voice, which ordinarily was low and deep, become loud, angry and menacing; and at the same time Lizzie distinctly heard Mrs. Desmond sobbing passionately. This went on, with occasional lulls and changes, for a full hour. Then the colonel appeared, dressed, and went out; he was in his usual state when he came down to breakfast. He gave orders that Mrs. Desmond's breakfast should be carried up to her. Lizzie had performed this service for her mistress, and found her with her eyes red and her face tear-stained, and trembling with nervousness and exhaustion. She had remained in that state the greater part of the day. She had said little, and nothing in the way of explanation of what had happened. Late in the afternoon she had made an effort to compose herself, and had informed Lizzie that she and the colonel were to dine out that evening. By the time she was dressed the colonel had arrived and gone directly to his rooms, where he had rapidly made his toilet, and the two had entered their carriage and driven off. Such was Lizzie's narrative.

Evidently some startling change had marred the peace of the Desmond household. But although Robert Johnson possessed a key toward solving the mystery of which Lizzie knew nothing, he no more than she could satisfy himself as to exactly what was the matter. On the face of it it would seem as if Hanier must have something to do with it; yet the latter had appeared to be the proximate cause of the disturbance, and the letter had certainly contained no reference to the ex-butler. On the other hand, what, if not the latter, could be adequate to the production of such an outbreak? It was a puzzle, and Johnson did not as yet see his way through it.

Pending further developments he quieted Lizzie with such assurances as suggested themselves to him, and taking leave of her betook himself leisurely to the house in which the Desmonds were dining. It was a bad night—wet, gusty and dismal—and some two or three hours must elapse before the guests would begin to depart. Johnson, however, had a phlegmatic and philosophical vein in him, and was not much disconcerted, even by the weather. He was provided with a waterproof cloak, and with pipe and tobacco, and in company with these and his own thoughts, he paced to and fro along the block on which the house stood, from nine o'clock until after eleven. Then the first of the carriages received its freight and rolled away, followed by another and another; until at length the Desmonds' coupé drew up before the door, and the colonel and his wife came down the awning-covered steps, and under the raised umbrella of the footman on the curb-stone, and were shut up and driven away. Johnson put his pipe in his pocket and turned homeward.

He was fairly prepared to find them driving anywhere rather than to their own house; but herein he was mistaken. They proceeded straight home; and, as their destination became evident, Johnson began to fear that all his waiting had been in vain. At length the coupé drew up before the house; the footman descended from the box and opened his umbrella; the colonel and his wife got out and went up the steps, and were under the shelter of the portico. The footman returned to his seat on the box, and the vehicle drove away to the stables. Johnson only waited to hear the house door open and the couple disappear.

But a minute and three minutes—passed by, and still they two stood in the portico. Their figures were just discernible in shadowy outline against the lamp-lit glazing of the door. What in the name of wonder were they doing there? Had the colonel lost his night-key, and were the servants dead to the bell? It was an inclement night to spend on a doorstep, even under the shelter of so fashionably-decorated a porch as the Desmonds'. Johnson exhausted his ingenuity in trying to arrive at a plausible explanation of this oddity, but without success.

By-and-bye a sluggish rattling was heard on the pavement and a hack hove in sight, loitering lazily down the avenue. The driver had evidently carried his last fare to his destination and was bound on his way home. A dim orange light, white now gleaming obscurely in the dim, wet light. He passed the Desmonds' house, but scarcely had he done so when the two came rapidly down the steps, and after hastening a few yards along the sidewalk, the colonel hailed him.

The hackman halted, looked around, and drew up to the curb-stone. A brief dialogue between him and the colonel followed, and then the latter and Mrs. Desmond entered the hack, which resumed its progress with some little increase of briskness. Johnson followed: it was easy to keep pace with this Jehu. They went down the avenue and turned the corner of Twenty-sixth-street.

Johnson, as he trotted in pursuit, gave a grunt of surprise. This was not in accordance with his calculations. Could it be possible that they were going to Louis Hanier's?

The hack kept on its way. The doubt resolved itself into a certainty. They went down Broadway and Sixth-avenue. Half-way down the next block they came to a stop. A few moments elapsed and then someone got out. It was not the colonel, however, it was a female figure—Mrs. Desmond. She slipped swiftly across the sidewalk, and down the rickety portico of the old wine shop, and rang the bell. A few minutes passed with no result. She rang again. Then, after an interval, Johnson heard the door open, and the woman disappeared.

What was the meaning of it? If the colonel suspected his wife of infidelity with their former butler, surely it was singular that he should allow her to enter that butler's house, alone in the dead of night. And if he had no such suspicions, what possible business could he or she have with Hanier at all?

Some little time elapsed—perhaps a quarter of an hour—and then the door of the shop opened and Mrs. Desmond reappeared. She quickly entered the hack, which thereupon turned round, and loitered back to Fifth-avenue, and thence upward to within three blocks of the Desmonds' house. Here it halted again, and the two got out. The colonel paid the man, who thereupon wheeled round and vanished in the direction of home. Mrs. Desmond walked on to their doorstep, ascended it, and in another moment Johnson heard the door open and close. They were at home at last.

But what they had been doing, Johnson, after all his pains, could not form the most distant idea. He was at a loss to conceive what motive could have produced these results. It was plain that the visit to Hanier's had been made with careful precautions for secrecy. The Desmonds' own carriage had been dismissed, they had waited for the appearance of a hack, and, when one came, they had hailed it from the street instead of from the stoop of their house. But was the visit of personal or political significance, or of both? These were questions that demanded an immediate answer.

NARROW ESCAPE OF A GENERAL'S DAUGHTER.

A TIMELY RESCUE.

(From the Hampshire Independent.)

There is nothing more interesting, nay, fascinating, than the talk of our heavy defenders who have served their Queen and country in far distant lands. To talk with an Indian officer, hearing his reminiscences and adventures, is a treat which we have enjoyed it always appreciate. Consequently (writes a special reporter of the Hampshire Independent) I was delighted to receive instructions to interview Lieutenant-General Clement H. Shaw, who has won his spurs in India, and is now living, with his family, in comparative retirement, at Dr. Vicary's Vicarage, Shanklin, Isle of Wight. The Vicarage is a model haven of rest. Enclosed in its own grounds, it rests beneath the lee of a lofty down pile from which it obtains its name. In the trees were nests of sweet songsters, who are never disturbed. Its trees were numerous, indeed, and all of a generally weak and prostrate condition. We called in a doctor, and I am bound to say that he succeeded in getting her out of bed; but there was still weakness, dizziness, and in great wretchedness, and suffering from what I should call a semi or bloodlessness. She had a kind of fever, accompanied with sickness. Well, we went to Bembridge, in the Isle of Wight, and there I first heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Indeed, —and if Miss Pond were in he would intrust it to her. All this, of course, was mere diplomacy on Robert's part to avert suspicion of anything personal in his relations with Miss Pond. It probably had the success that generally attends diplomacy of that kind. But at all events Lizzie came down and had an interview with Robert in the hall.

FOOTBALL NOTES.

[By Half-Back.]

Two capital matches were played on Saturday in Ipswich, and curiously enough, both ended in drawn battles. The visit of the Norwich Churchmen to the Portman Road ground was expected to be a very hot tight game, but it was generally supposed that the Framlingham Collegians would have proved too much for the Middle Street team. That they have not so, however, the old boys giving an excellent account of themselves against the club which has cost them dear in the final tie for the Suffolk Cup. Neither team, it appears, was thoroughly representative, the home forwards having a somewhat weak line, while Rudsam and Garnett were away from the College eleven. Still, taking everything into consideration, the Ipswich men may be congratulated upon the result of the match.

Cattermole is still away from the I.M.S.P.P. team, and the care of the citadel is still an awkward post for the Constable to fill satisfactorily, but all Middle Street do well at back, was unable to play in his old position on Saturday, and accordingly exchanged positions with Pardoe, while Foster came further forward than usual amongst the forwards. This department is generally considered a weak spot in the School team, but in the match in question they were especially weak to the right form shewn by Miller at centre, Purser and Bennett, a considerable improvement was decidedly noticeable, and the result was that the visitors' custodian—who is far from equalling his predecessor in skill at present—was beaten three times in the first half, the second College forwards responded with a like number. It is a somewhat curious fact that, although no less than six goals were registered in the first half, the second 45 minutes produced not a single point.

The Ipswich Town may be said to have had rather the better of the match with the Norwich C.E.Y.M.S. although they just failed to pull off the event. From the commencement they pressed their opponents, and were away with a dash that fairly took the wind out of their opponents' sails. The Christians, however, soon pulled themselves together and responded to the opening attacks, and occasionally getting to their opponents' quarters. The Ipswich forwards' experienced "shard lines" on several occasions, and more than once caused scoring by a few inches merely. Burleigh's goal-keeping has very few faults to find with, and was up to his particular spot in which he was most wanted, and cleared his lines with cool judgement. He was certainly not up to his usual brilliant form further than that his stud-ave, but Cornell's display was also worthy of the highest commendation, as the score-sheet will testify.

The halves on both sides were perhaps the pick of the teams, although the Town captain was evidently out of form, probably from want of practice. A considerable improvement in the play of Walford's play as he used and on one or two occasions, to give him his just due, he fairly outshone Bennett. Of the backs, a full back, his kicking especially leaving something to be desired, but I have more hopes of him than I had a fortnight back.

Oxborrow without Kent is not the same man as when his co-partner is present. He no longer is absolutely responsible for some dashing sprints and centres, but that pretty combination which we have seen work so effectively on previous occasions is sadly lacking, the little slip, too, in front of the "Church" goal was not calculated to place a man on the best possible terms with their custodian, Bennett's versatility as a back is passed with good judgement. He needs a little more powder behind his centres, but certainly should not attempt to "skying" them, as he frequently indulged in a contemporary. I should also like to see a little more disposition on his part to assist in the defence when necessary, an example which Oxborrow sets him excellently.

Towns will be a useful man when he has learned to avoid the individual style of play which his former experience has unfortunately taught him. For pace, pluck, and shooting he is a most valuable man to quintette. Stanley Turner and Ratcliff bore the brunt of the forward work, the former being especially noticeable for his dash and tenacity, owing practically to the capital task, whilst the latter tried Burleigh with several cool shots, but the "Churchman" was always wide awake.

An Aldeburgh correspondent writes that recently a meeting was called to take into consideration the establishing of a football club in connection with the town, which has now thoroughly successful in its object, the club being fully formed and started. Woodbridge Grammar school were the first to accept the challenge of the fishermen, and they journeyed on Saturday to the land of cream to meet the locals. The battle was fought on the Recreation Ground, near the Station. The East Coasters began with an attack upon the School quarters, and the ball was dangerously near the goal. Nothing, however, materialised, and the ever, missed a shot, and the first goal was scored for Woodbridge by King. The Aldeburgh forwards then with a goal kicked by R. McDougal, and half time was now called with an even score. Recommencing, the home team were not long in obtaining a slight shot from Roy Smythe. This goal won the match for the Sprats, and a very agreeable victory for so newly formed a club. The return match will be against the 7th Battery 1st N.B.E.D.R.A.

The boys' eleven of Beccles College fully maintained the prestige of the school by beating the aspirants of Gorleston in an exceedingly hollow fashion by no less than five goals to nil. It certainly it would not be unfair to state that Beccles College are better supported by their footballers amongst their students than any other school-barring, of course, the Colonial College—in Suffolk.

The Orwell Works proved all too good for the Ipswich Town Reserves on Saturday. The match, which was played upon the Broom Hill ground, went in favour of the home team from the commencement, and the victors evidently shewed a considerable improvement in the matter of combination.

Beccles Caxton were at home to Saxmundham on Saturday afternoon. The visitors came late, and the ordinary time of battle was considerably curtailed in consequence. Nevertheless, there was quite sufficient time allowed for the home men to rattle up seven goals, their opponents being unable to reply. What was the cause to the Herts Hall Park men?

Loiston gave the men of Halesworth a particularly warm task to secure a victory in their meeting at the latter town. In spite of their heavy reverse at the hands of Beccles College the previous week—which is certainly almost inexplicable—I think the Halesworthians may safely be congratulated upon the supersession in the form of their players, and the conviction is stronger upon me than ever that they are going to take effective hand amongst Suffolk clubs which they held a few years back.

The results of the League matches in the first division on Saturday were as follows:—Preston North End beat Sheffield United, 1—0; Sunderland beat Everton, 2—0; Wolverhampton Wanderers beat Sheffield Wednesday, 2—0; *Aston Villa beat Wednesday, 2—0; *Aston Villa beat Wednesday, 2—0; *Blackburn Rovers beat Bolton Wanderers, 3—1; Notts Forest beat *Stoke, 3—0; *Burnley beat Small Heath, 3—1; *Everton beat Liverpool, 3—0. The table corrected to date stands as under:—

In the Second Division Notts County experienced their first reverse, and that upon their own ground, at the hands of Manchester City. The result was a great surprise as much in the matter of the defeated, Woolwich Arsenal, playing at Manchester, made a draw of three goals all with Newton Heath. The only other match played was between Newcastle United and Darwen at Newcastle, in which the first-named proved victorious by three goals to two. The following table is revised to date:—

Everton has beaten the record in the matter of the gate in a League match. On Saturday over 40,000 persons attended the first meeting of Everton and Liverpool, in receipts of £1,635 18s. 6d. This is the first time four figures have been reached in a League game. The highest previous was £733 two seasons ago, also at Everton, when North End were the visitors.

Sunderland have been touring in the south during the present week, but have met with a rather warmer reception than they could have anticipated. Woolwich Arsenal on Monday were down with two goals to one, which was followed on Tuesday by a further reverse of four to two at the hands of a strong team of Canada.

Colchester Town were all at sea on Thursday afternoon at Southend, and they and all Middle Street to remember their 12 to 1 defeat. The Middle School Past and Present were able to place a strong side in the field, and sing Cock a Doodle Doo at the close to visitors. Smith at half was decidedly out of form, but the play of D. Mills is worthy of high commendation, and Thompson, Cook, and Hall at back were strong at back, and the whole front line were on very good terms with themselves against the very poor defence of Colchester.

St. Mary's Hospital will make an appearance upon the Portman Road ground in opposition to the Town this afternoon, and a good match is sure to be the result. Cowell's first team will entertain Bramham Athletic at Woodbridge Park. Two other teams of Cowell's will be occupied with Bramford Works and Middle School (Boys) respectively.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

The Church Congress of 1894 has been an unqualified success. It is true that the numbers attending were fewer than at Birmingham in the preceding year, but we may remind captious critics that there is some geographical difference between Birmingh m in the Midlands and Exeter in the "far West"—not to mention the trifling difference in the population of the two cities. The two best attended meetings were those on "Bible Criticism" and "Elementary Education." The latter was capable of holding 700 was not big enough for the former, and there were, in consequence, two overflow meetings. The debate on "Elementary Education" was remarkable for the extraordinary ovation which Mr. ATHELSTANE RILEY received, and also from the fact that the Bishop of LONDON declared himself in favour of the "

TOWN AND COUNTRY.

The first appearance in Ipswich of the Bishop Suffragan of Thetford will be on Sunday, December 9th, when he will preach at the Tower Church in the morning and afternoon.

Judging by the tenth annual report of the National Footpath Preservation Society, it would appear that there are still a large number of people who persist in their efforts to enclose ancient footpaths and rights-of-way to many of the most charming of Nature's beauty spots. Of cases dealing with the stoppage of footpaths, encroachments, &c., the Society last year dealt with no less than 103, while during its existence it has investigated 1,256 such cases; so that without allowing for the numerous cases which do not come under public notice or within the purview of the Society, those who take the responsibility of safeguarding these valuable rights have thoroughly earned the thanks of the community at large. We notice that the town of Thetford possesses a society for the preservation of footpaths and commons, which, in conjunction with the National Association, was last year instrumental in remedying a grievance respecting the impounding of cattle on a common. Perhaps the most important event in the history of the National Society was the Barnlake case, decided in February last year by the House of Lords. After six years' litigation which the Green Lane Highway Company, which tried to stop a right-of-way and compel the public to walk four miles instead of one, judgment was for the fourth time given against the Company. The upholding of such rights will likely form a part of the duties of the new Parish Councils to be brought into existence in December, and Mr. H. Allnutt, of 42, Essex Street, Strand, the secretary to the National Footpath Preservation Society, invites the cordial co-operation of the new governing bodies in these matters.

We have so often set forth the utility of a thorough knowledge of practical work that a reiteration were both tedious and unnecessary; nevertheless, it affords us pleasure to again refer to the excellent services which the Ipswich centre is rendering in extending this sphere of public usefulness. In the annual report just issued, the Committee state that 292 pupils have received instruction in first aid, 199 of whom received certificates. In addition, the members of the police and Fire Brigade have attended the classes under the School Board, while lectures and certificates have been granted to 78 women. Undoubtedly in matters of ambulance Ipswich is well to the front; but with the popular hon. secretary and treasurer (Miss Conlcher), many may be inclined to ask, What is the result of it all? The answer is simple enough—"We hope we may feel that some pain has been eased and some lives have been saved by the knowledge gained at these classes." Surely this is sufficient reward for the valuable time and energy which has been devoted by the ambulance surgeons, and all who have taken an interest in the movement may have spent in furthering the cause of suffering humanity.

The Eastern Counties Branch of the National Trade Defence Fund do not desire to see the Parish Councils "nobbled" by the Radicals nor entirely by the labourers. They are willing to join with them in taxation and representation going hand in hand. With this object in view they have issued an appeal to licenseholders throughout the eastern counties urging them to look to their interests and nominate prospective candidates for the new authorities. Few reasonable minded men will object to the desire of "Bung" to be represented, and for our own part we see no obstacle in the way to the trade having direct interest in the bodies which, by the Government Act of 1894, has called into being. There are few townships in Suffolk where, from among the ranks of the trade, trustworthy, respectable business men may not be found; and it would be as follows that these are among the largest contributors to the local as well as Imperial taxes the demand for representation is in every sense a reasonable one.

Commenting on the novel auction sale which took place at Ipswich this week, our Special Agricultural Correspondent writes:—"What next? The past week has actually witnessed in Ipswich the taking of a farm by public auction. This is something very unusual for this part of the country at any rate. The publicity thus given to a proceeding usually conducted in private, with little or nothing known about the terms of the tenancy, to the outside world, is indeed some evidence of the condition to which agriculture has been reduced in this locality. Much has been said at different times about the position of the landlords in view of the deterioration of the land, but this one has an instance of it. If in the case of a comparatively small occupation of 130 acres the owner is shown to have to be content with less by about £200 a-year than he once was is the habit of receiving, it is not difficult to form some idea, although it may be an altogether inadequate one, of the position of the owners of many hundreds of acres. This is a farm within easy reach of the prosperous town of Ipswich. Mr. Wm. Arnott, who conducted the letting, is alluding to the fact that a proceeding of that kind was unusual in Suffolk, might well say that the times had altered, and that it was necessary to resort to unusual measures. Times have altered with a vengeance!"

Now that it is certain that next year's Church Congress will be held in Norwich, our readers may be curious to know the name of the president-elect (Capt. C. L. A. Skinner made in these columns some time ago. The overwhelming majority of the lay and clerical representatives of the Archdeaconry of Suffolk at the Diocesan Conference approved of the suggestion that it should be held next year in Ipswich, but opponents of the proposal are almost all clergy from the neighbourhood of Bungay and Beccles. It is somewhat curious that the laymen from those districts, whilst acknowledging that Ipswich is more convenient of access to Ipswich, are yet prepared to sacrifice their own convenience for the possible good of the Church. On the other hand the clergy write that Norwich is more convenient to them personally, therefore they will oppose Ipswich.

The Local Government Board frequently constitute a thorn in the sides of Boards of Guardians, and this has proved the case in the Hoxne Union, the guardians of which are at present greatly perplexed over an appointment which the Local Government Board refuse to confirm. The appointment in question is certainly desirable in these times—the Hoxne Guardians recently decided to grant two large relief districts, and allow one officer to discharge duties which had hitherto found employment for three. The Board of Guardians here steps in and asserts that the Guardians, owing to the unwieldy character of the districts, are sacrificing efficiency at the expense of economy. Accordingly the Government Board inspector was specially sent over to the last meeting to demonstrate the force of this argument to the guardians; but with a greatly divided Board a satisfactory solution seems to become more than before. There are many sides to a question of this nature, but having regard to all the circumstances of the case, we think the Local Government Board are in this instance adopting the right course. Let us have rational economy in the matter, but space must not for public scandal which would inevitably arise by poor people being subjected to all sorts of annoyance and incon. venience simply because misfortune overtakes them. It is time such power be given to some to act in urgent cases, but it frequently happens that those are the occasions which most readily lend themselves to abuse.

Shall ladies be admitted to the debating class? is the question raised by a writer in the Ipswich Young Men's Review who "well remembers in the old rooms a stirring debate on the important subject 'Is woman mentally and morally inferior to man?'" !!! In this we course [sic] is an intentional one, or an exhibition of the vulgarity and priggishness of ignorance? asks the Christian Commonwealth. Mentally inferior—that piece of canonbury is bad enough; but morally inferior! The shameless insolence of it! The writer says, "and we had the audacity"—I should call it the gross impertinence—" to invite the presence of the fair sex." Incredible as it seems, it is stated that "a few accepted the invitation, and in less than ten minutes," adds this marvellous account, "we had proved that women were superior morally to men"! I never read anything more abominable. As to the first part of the idiotic question—" by the time one of our lady visitors had expressed her 'sentiments' we were considerably bored, and many of us retired to the bar, whilst another the ladies were 'stronger minded' than the men. Still—'fanch'—" we had a good meeting, and some of us had the 'consate' taken out of us, and it did us good." The writer accordingly concludes: " We certainly think that ladies should not be debarred from such and all of our meetings, and some of the most suitable to which we might invite their presence are surely those connected with our Debating Society." Thank you for nothing! say I, whatever you may call for "the fair sex." No lady would think of going near a place whence is officially issued such unmanly, preposterous, pestiferous rubbish.

A MAD MOTHER'S TERRIBLE CRIME.

BURNING THREE CHILDREN TO DEATH.

A woman named Harrigan locked herself and three children in a barn near Elizabeth, N.J., early on Monday morning, and afterwards, it is believed, set fire to the building. The unfortunate woman, who is supposed to have been insane, and her three children perished in the flames. She has lately been suffering from malarial fever, which affected her mental condition. The neighbours hurried to the barn to extinguish the flames, but they were too late to save the lives of the victims.

DEATH AT THE PLOUGH.

FOUND DEAD AT COPFORD.

Mark Balls, ploughman at Bull Bank Farm, Copford, was ploughing in a field near Fiddler's Wood on Friday, when he died very suddenly. At half-past eight in the morning he was at work with his team. At 9 o'clock a half-past ten one of his little sons found him lying dead in the field.

SERIOUS TRAP ACCIDENT NEAR BURY.

AN ALDERMAN HEAVILY THROWN.

Mr. F. Nunn, an Alderman of Bury St. Edmund's, was recently riding with Mr. Hughes in the locality of Newmarket, both gentlemen having been to the Great Portland Farm at Barnwell. When passing another property, their horses became very lively, bolted, and Mr. Nunn, as well as his companion, was thrown from the trap. Mr. Nunn was thrown on his head, cutting his collar-bone and fractured a rib. Mr. Nunn fell heavily and was severely shaken, but fortunately did not sustain very serious injury.

A SUDBURY FISHMONGER'S AFFAIRS.

TRADING WITHOUT KEEPING BOOKS.

The statement of affairs of Henry George Rolando, of Sepulchre Street, Sudbury, fishmonger, has been issued by the Official Receiver in Bankruptcy, and shows debts due to unsecured creditors amounting to £2325 8s. 11d. Deficiency account £1284 3s. 11d. The debtor states that he started business in Sudbury about four years ago with £50 capital. He kept no books of account beyond a small pocket book, and states that he only became aware of his insolvency about six months before the receiving order, which was due to illness of his deceased wife, and the loss of three ponies.

SUDDEN DEATHS NEAR LOWESTOFT.

DIED IN HER DAUGHTER'S ARMS.

Within a few hours of the sudden death of the man William Alexander, at Lowestoft, the wife of a farmer, residing only about a mile distant, passed away suddenly. Mrs. Mary Ann Back, wife of Mr. Robert Back, whose husband, Mr. W. Backham, is well known and respected farmer residing at Gunton. The deceased lady was a little over 70 years of age, had for some time been suffering from heart disease. On Friday evening, whilst sitting in an arm chair in her house, she handed to her daughter Mrs. Cooper, who is a profuse state of perspiration, and hardly had the words left her lips than she fell back and expired in the daughter's arms.

PLOMESGATE UNION AFFAIRS.

AN EVIL WHICH OLD AGE PENSIONS WOULD REMOVE.

At Monday's meeting of the Plomesgate Union Board of Guardians, Mr. Lawrence, on hearing the orders of the County Council, asked what would happen if an insufficient number of members were nominated to serve on the Parish Council. He thought there would be a difficulty in some parishes in finding sufficient electors willing to serve as Councillors.—The Chairman said he had noticed that the Government could not be vitiated by any vacancy in its body.—Out of 146 cases for relief, no less than 103 were over 70 years of age. Mr. Maclean remarked that old age pensions would remove this class of pauperism.

A DANGEROUS VISITOR AT BATON.

HOW STACKS ARE FIRED.

At a special sitting of the Hartismere Bench, held at Eye, on Monday, Samuel Finbow (62), labourer, Bacton, was charged on remand with having been found skulking in a field at Oxton, on the 13th inst., without any visible means of subsistence and being unable to render a good account of himself. The defendant pleaded guilty, and promised that if the Magistrates would discharge him he would go back to London at once.—Superintendent Bond, of Eye, Constable, stated that when he found the defendant in the straw stack he had a quantity of matches upon him. The matches added that he had been detected in the act of arson in the neighbourhood.—Supt. Barnard informed the Court that the prisoner was a common thief and a vagabond, and had been frequently convicted and failed to reform his character, whereupon the Chairman said the Bench had no alternative but to send the defendant to prison for three weeks with hard labour.

A LADY WITH MEANS GOES TO THE WORKHOUSE.

THE DISTRESSING ALDEBURGH CASE.

The Plomesgate Union Board of Guardians met on Monday, under the presidency of Mr. George Walker. The case of Mrs. Gulthorpe (Aldeburgh) was again brought before the Board, and Dr. Cossey, who practises properly in the Birkbeck Bank, amounting with interest to £133 1s. 9d., was being realised, and that the £300 in shares in the Aldeburgh Gas Company would not be productive of anything for some time, as that Society was in liquidation. The £300 ought to be paid in instalments from a case in the County Court. Her jewellery and clothes would be sent to the Workhouse, and her furniture sold by auction. She had failed to pay debts.—Mr. Minter thought it was a bad precedent to receive people with a considerable amount of property into the Workhouse.—Mr. Thompson explained that she was a perfectly free agent, and that she could leave the house at any time and claim her money.

MUSIC WANTED FOR FELIXSTOWE.

PROPOSED TOWN BAND.

The residents of Felixstowe, on Friday evening, met at the Victoria Hall, Felixstowe, with a view to forming a town band. Mr. C. A. Cressey, J.P., presided, and the proceedings were marked with the greatest unanimity. The first resolution, on the proposal of the object were read from Capt. E. G. Protyman (who promised a donation of £5 towards purchasing the instruments), Rev. W. D. Haskell, and Mr. F. Jennings, also promising donations, were heartily received. The Rev. W. Armstrong proposed, and Mr. Downe seconded, the following resolution, which was carried nem. con. Mr. Downing proposed a resolution to the effect appointing a Committee to obtain subscriptions and make arrangements, and this, seconded by Mr. J. W. Read, was adopted. A Committee was then appointed, consisting of Messrs. Downing, Meadows, Morsley, Read, Jackson, Wilson, Robinson, Armstrong, and Wareham, with power to add to their number. Votes of support to the extent of £35 were made at the meeting. The Felixstowe Town band, conducted by Mr. W. C. Archer, junr., played selections at intervals, and a vote of thanks was accorded to them for their services.

THETFORD ROADS IN THE 17TH CENTURY.

INTERESTING RETROSPECT.

At the meeting of the Commons and Footpaths Preservation Society, held on Saturday, a paper on the matter of

OUR NEW BISHOP.

CONSECRATION AT WESTMINSTER.

IMPRESSIVE CEREMONY.

To the student of East Anglian history the first thought regarding the Consecration of the Bishop Suffragan of Thetford must have been a wish that the ceremonial could have been in Norwich Cathedral. For it was to the last Bishop of Thetford (the first of Norwich) that this stately pile—the most purely Norman of its kind in Great Britain—owed its origin. Norman of its kind in Great Britain—owed its origin. Few prelates have been able to have behind them such a magnificent monument; and now that the necessity has arisen for the Bishop, who derives his title from the city, to obtain an assistant under the older name, the mind is more than ever impressed with the greatness of the work of Herbert de Losinga. Generations of men have come and gone, nearly eight centuries have rolled away, and the lovely cloistered temple that he caused to be reared to the glory of God, and which he been restored and extended on the lines he suggested, has continued a centre of religious light and leading, a sanctuary of peace and comfort for weary citizens. With such surroundings, and with the encouraging records of hallowed labour on every side, the consecration of a new Bishop of Thetford might have seemed to gain an impulse and an inspiration from the atmosphere of the place, and no one who attended the service could but have been struck with the peculiar dignity of the succession. And this would have been had the choice lay between even St. Paul's and Norwich. But the greatness of far outweigh any local considerations. Since the days of Edward the Confessor to that recent time when Dr. Bridge's exquisite setting of "Crossing the Bar" softened a nation's gloom at losing its last Poet Laureate, the history of the country has been breathed on its walls, and frequently gained enduring material upon them. Kings and Queens, beginning with William the Conqueror, have there received the rite of coronation. Bishops, who have been most active in guiding the ecclesiastical polity of the realm, have there been set apart for the life's office by the laying on of hands. Statesmen, more famous Englishmen of every form of mind and genius have, to the honour of the Church of England, found a last resting-place. The service on Thursday and last Sunday evening had other, and, it may be said, at once the antiquity and never-failing vitality of the Church. The function was two-fold. On the one hand Canon Lloyd having for twelve years, as vicar of the Cathedral church at Newcastle, carried on the Church work in the North, was to be called to a somewhat higher, though not more arduous, duty as Suffragan Bishop of the Northwich Diocese. On the other, the Rt. C. O. L. Ridley, vicar of St. Paul's, was to be set apart for a time of service, to go forth to colonial work as Bishop of Perth, West Australia. The act of consecration was performed

BY THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY,

assisted by the bishops from other dioceses, in using the rule that not less than two shall undertake the duty. In the cold, grey twilight of a dull autumn morning—the choir stalls were lighted with candles—the Dean and Canons of Westminster, about a quarter-past ten o'clock, met the Lord Bishop of Durham, Primate, and Bishops-elect in the Jerusalem Chamber. The minor Canons assembled in the outer chamber, and the choir and choristers in the nave. Thence an exceedingly picturesque procession was formed in the following order:—Choir, choristers two and two, gentlemen of the choir two and two, minor canons, the Precentor (the Rev. S. Flood Jones), Canons Basil, Wilberforce, and Duckworth, the Dean (the Very Rev. Dr. Bradley), the Proctor and Treasurer of the Queen Anne Bounty, the Bishop Suffragan Elect of Thetford, the Bishop Elect of Perth, the Bishops of Newcastle, Norwich, Peterborough, Bath and Wells, Honduras and Redding, and his Grace the Primate of England. The Bridge presided at the organ, and played an opening voluntary during the seating. The service of the Communion was begun by the Archbishop, the Bishop of Peterborough read the Epistle and the Bishop of Bath and Wells the Gospel. The Nicene Creed was sung with beautiful expression and sweetness to Cobb in G—a favourite setting with Dr. Bridge, and one in which the Westminster choir excel. Canon Norris, vicar of Witney, Oxfordshire, delivered a brief sermon from the text of St. John "I shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me." "What is consecration?" asked the preacher, and having pointed out the importance of the question, he went on as applied to the laity as well as to the clergy, he impressed the special significance of the verse on the present occasion. With an apology for venturing upon so delicate a subject, he pleased and instructed his audience by showing that over and above the performance of their ordinary functions, what was most graved from them by the clergy was spiritual sympathy, which should in turn inspire the brethren below them. He recognised how necessary it was that a Bishop was taken up in matters of organisation, and observed quaintly that if a Saint Augustine in the 5th century complained of want of leisure for the study of the Bible, how much more could the present day feel the pressure. Among the qualities which must adorn a Bishop, the preacher placed in the first rank holiness and humility, quoting from Thomas Fuller regarding such a character—"His holiness and humility doth increase; his more eminent place doth not puff him up. Far be it from him that the glitter of the candlestick should dim the shining of the candle." The sermon having been concluded, the Canon's verger conducted the Bishops-elect to the Chapter House, where they

as the first sign of their increased responsibility. The scene in the Cathedral as they slowly passed down the aisle was one of great solemnity and impressiveness. Most hauntingly the choir sang Mendelssohn's "Lift thine eyes," and the Bishop-elect made the responses at the anthem "Cast thy burden on the Lord, and He shall sustain thee" (Mendelssohn). The Archbishop then took his seat in front of the Communion table, and the Bishops-elect were in turn presented—Dr. Lloyd by the Bishops of Norwich and Newcastle. The Archbishop formally demanded the Queen's mandates for the consecration, which were read, and the oath of canonical obedience taken. The Bishops-elect remained kneeling on the step in front of the Archbishop's chair during the chanting of the Litany, in which was inserted a special suffrage for the occasion. The Archbishop afterwards commended the questions of examination, and the Bishops-elect retired and put on the rest of the episcopal habit. Meanwhile the lovely anthem, "O pray for the peace of Jerusalem, they shall prosper that love thee," was sweetly sung by the choir. The Litany followed—on the return of the Bishops-elect—by the Veni Creator Spiritus. The Archbishop and Bishops next laid hands in turn upon them, and the consecration was completed, the Bishops of Durham and Norwich joining officially. The offertory for the Westminster Spiritual Aid Fund, the Prayer for the Church Militant was said by the Archbishop. A large proportion of the assembly remained for the celebration of the Holy Communion. It may be added that the choir never sang more sacredly that nothing shall mar the rare beauty of the music of the services there, took a particular pleasure in the service of Thursday on account of his association with Suffolk.

THE SUFFOLK INCENDIARY SCARE.

FARM BUILDINGS BURNT TO THE GROUND AT DISS.

Late on Friday evening a fire was discovered in a wooden building on land in the occupation of Mr. F. J. Barrage, adjoining the Diss sewage farm. The material was very combustible, and in a few minutes the flames had obtained a good hold, and as there was no chance of saving the building, it was left to burn unchecked. Some farm implements were destroyed with the shed. There is no doubt the fire was the work of an incendiary.

SEARCHING FOR COAL.

The Builder says:—Our neighbours on the other side of the Channel do not seem to be at fortunate in the matter of coal finding as the promoters of the Channel Tunnel scheme. Flushed by the success of the engineer of that undertaking in discovering coal at Dover, and bearing in mind the knowledge that coal exists and is worked in the Boulonnais, a few French capitalists some months ago put down a trial boring near Calais. M. Gustave Dupont, a well-known French geologist, plainly told the executants of the new "forage" that they were running great risk in overlaying their pit with clay, which was just a possibility of success. The nearness of the selected spot to Dover, and the fact that under similar conditions the coal was found to strike across the Channel, were factors in the problem that could not be resisted. So the boring was commenced, and continued to 1,640 feet. We now know that at a depth of 325 mètres the tools have

ALIGHTED UPON ROCKS OF DEVONIAN AGE.

In other words they have found the formation that under ordinary circumstances occurs beneath the Coal Measures. The result is that the "forage" continues, though it is only a few days since the mortifying discovery was made, have decided to go on with the work. Judging from the known disposition of the rock under the line of strike, it is just possible that these Devonian beds are inverted, or thrust-faulted, and that the Coal Measures are to be found under them. If so, to test the problem now presented is very similar to that obtaining in the London area. Here also we have found Devonian conditions at 1,000 feet, but we have yet to test their thickness. If the French really do find the Coal Measures at Calais, after what has happened, it will render the occurrence of coal under London almost a certainty.

BUILDING TRADE REVELATIONS AT BURY.

HOW A BUSINESS WAS FINANCED.

On Tuesday, at Bury St. Edmund's, before Judge Eardley Wilmot, the bankruptcy of Joseph Robinson, formerly carrying on business as a builder, residing in Brentgrovel Street, again came before the Court. Creditor's applied against the rejection of his proof. It seemed that as the result of a meeting of creditors in March, 1893, an arrangement was made by which it was agreed that a composition of 10s. in the £ should be paid, and Mr. G. Cornish, Mr. A. Stutter, and two other gentlemen undertook to find the money. This was eventually for a long period liability presumably devolved upon Mr. Cornish and Mr. Stutter as joint trustees, but it was found that the gentlemen associated with the business were concerned. For years the business was thus financed, the bankrupt being in the habit of as to workmen's wages and his own advances (£3 per week), as well as statements regarding the value of the work done. Mr. Cornish, who had become solely responsible for the composition (£1,200 all told), died in June, 1893, declined to finance the business any longer. Mr. Cornish eventually sought to prove against the estate for £1,200 on the composition and furniture, and for £336, which amount, it had been elicited, had been received at various times by the debtor, and used for what was due to the estate, when it was being financed practically by Mr. Cornish, his House would allow him to prove for £536. This claim was, however, allowed against the present estate. Hence Mr. Cornish will be permitted to prove for £536, with the deficiency ranking accordingly in whatever dividend is ultimately declared.

WOMAN'S WAYS AND WORK.

O woman! lovely woman! nature made thee
To temper man; we had been brutes without you.
Thomas Otway.

Whether the marriage of the Czarovitch and Princess Alix of Hesse will take place in November or be indefinitely postponed is still a matter of uncertainty. Dr. Oscar, it will be remembered, was to be married, and Queen Victoria, with whom Princess Alix is a great favourite, is anxious nothing should interfere with the happiness of her granddaughter.

Owing to the prevalence of measles at Sandringham, the infant Prince Edward of York will remain at St. James's Palace for another week or two.

The people of Norwich and its neighbourhood are looking forward to the visit of the Duke and Duchess of York to that city, which is to take place next week.

Speaking as president of the Woman's Section at the Church Congress at Exeter last week, Mrs. Temple, wife of the Bishop of London, said "Never was there a greater demand for work among women than at the present time." "The greatest and difficult besetting of the lives of working girls have much increased owing to the changes that the last half-century has brought about in the circumstances of their lives." Women take up studies and enter into employments and even amusements which a short time ago were supposed to belong only to men, and this fact is a hopeful one and widening of pursuits bring with them increased temptations."

Mrs. Creighton read a rather lengthy paper upon "What women can do to raise the standard of moral life." Alluding to the increased liberty given to women, she says, "The question for our consideration now is, how are we to use for the burden of their liberty," and she asks, "Are mothers preparing their children for this?" "The condition of the world at the present time, independent beings must have an important influence on the standard of morality accepted by society." "It is," she says, "not an exaggeration to say that man is what woman wishes him to be." Therefore, "women, young, middle-aged, and old should take a strong personal part in the crusade against the social evil." Above all, "they must not accept evil as a necessity."

Lady Laura Ridding spoke about factory, mill, and warehouse girls. She strongly recommended the forming of evening clubs, and suggested that there should be provided for them healthful recreation and amusement. The best clubs she knew of were those which were managed by women, and the stories told about her. Alighting at the nearest railway station, one of the visitors asked an old peasant the way to Thöelles. "Ah, Sir," he replied, "you wish to see Thöelles in the summer! The place is all roses then. Take that road on the left, and follow it till you come to a large crucifix, and there they will point out to you the thatched cottage where she is lying, but if you like I will guide you." Having accepted his offer, away we went, and on the road he began to give us his opinion of the phenomena. "It is not natural, Sir, this long sleep," he remarked. "People here don't believe in it. It is said she gets up in the night to eat. All who come to see her leave a trifle. The family live on these offerings. That

ACCOUNTS FOR THE MIRACLE.

The neighbours say they have seen her get up. This is not true. The poor soul is ill, it is not natural to sleep for twelve years." At length Thöelles was reached, and in a few minutes we knocked at the cottage. A tall, gaunt, poorly-clad woman, opened the door. She was of the coarse peasant type, but not devoid of intelligence. Her features were drawn and pinched as are the most miserable cottages to be seen in the locality. On the walls were coloured prints representing the Holy Virgin and Child, and the Crucifixion, and on the tatters were strewed about. We asked her to show us Marguerite, whereupon she led us into a small room, and there on a wooden bed lay the girl, a mere skeleton whose eyes were closed, and whose face was of death-like paleness. The sight was appalling. Overcome with emotion we crossed ourselves and touched her forehead the cold sensation of death crept over us. Marguerite's body was covered with a single sheet, the sheets and disclosed to us a little emaciated arm formed of skin and bone only. Curious to say, on raising the sheet the body was found to be clothed in flannel. In that position, but in a few minutes, under the influence of that contraction, the warmth of the body increased, the sunken eyes of the girl lost their pallor, and the former appearance. The swollen face of the sleeper did not permit of her features, which she was formerly so handsome as her mother says, but to which the doctors have given a name, recalled the stories of simulation current in the villages are unfounded. But she has little or no flesh left; her bones are literally "skin and bone." The whole family derive from her lethargy her less would be unable to support her. She is kept alive by injections of milk and pepsine, and an occasional drop of wine. In the course of conversation, Mme. Bouyeval said that never would she consent to give up her daughter either to the Government or to science. She was her property; she belonged to nobody else, and she should not be taken to the hospital. The doctors of Bonneval had been to see her, said that a Barnum had offered her a large sum to be allowed to show her in the Chicago Exhibition, but with the utmost energy she declined to surrender the morning paper to me, and told me she would like to be a "new woman." "Why?" I asked. "Because I would have no object to my being a new man," and I at once chained her securely to the strongest bed-post in the house, and forbade any God to be named in her hearing. In the hours of this discipline she came to such senses as Providence has blessed her with, and is now the very loving and obedient creature I have described.

MASTER OF HIS OWN HOUSE.

The Standard said a short time ago is an article upon gardening that women were the best amateur gardeners, and to them is greatly due the increased admiration for horticulture which has of late been kept off later than usual this autumn, consequently we have for a long period had a plentiful supply of dahlias, both single and double, which are more effective touched them the last few nights, and we now turn with thankfulness to the splendid variety of Michaelmas daisies that are now in full bloom in the herbaceous border, and which are simply invaluable for late decoration.

Herbaceous plants should be removed, when necessary, either in autumn or spring; most people recommend the latter time, but we consider there is a good deal to be said in favour of autumn removal for those plants which are commencing to grow early. If there is a stretch of fairly mild weather at the end of September, and plants removed then are well watered in, they will have time to get established against winter cold, and be ready for prolific flowering next season. When removing herbaceous plants in spring, do not allow either to the many dead-looking roots, or else, owing to a severe frost, to put off transplanting till so late that the plants do not recover sufficiently before flowering time sufficiently to flower well and freely.

The prophecy of a phenomenally severe winter, a winter more severe than can be remembered by the "oldest inhabitant," warns us to look well to our stocks of coal. Whether the prophecy will be "fate" it has been repeatedly said, so in one way it is not trying to have to wrap oneself up in them, only, alas! our purses will not always bear the strain.

A cape of dark myrtle green cloth, lined with Mongolian fur, which forms a bordering all round and also a deep collar, is a very useful garment, and a similar cape could be carried out in other colours and other fur to suit the complexion and purse of the wearer. Capes are not worn very long, so much to about half-way between the waist and the knee; they are, however, very full round the edge. For those who can afford it, a long cape is becoming or so ideally delightful as velvet and fur.

This is to be a velvet year both for capes, trimming, and millinery. Mantles are very much trimmed outside with jet, spangles, and passementerie, and when not trimmed with fur are often edged with the new ostrich tip feather trimming.

Evening cloaks are much trimmed with white Thibet fur, the fur being arranged in the same way as that upon the grass cape described above. This evening cape can be made to wear with the fur either inside or out.

HOXNE GUARDIANS AND THEIR RELIEF DISTRICTS.

THE AMALGAMATION QUESTION AGAIN.

ECONOMY V. EFFICIENCY.

Considerable interest attached to the fortnightly meeting of the Hoxne Board of Guardians, held at Stradbroke, on Monday, under the presidency of Mr. J. Stradbroke, on Monday, under the presidency of Mr. J. Clarke Cobbold, when the question of amalgamating the two relief districts again came under discussion. A month ago the Board decided on one relieving officer in the room of two, and amalgamated the two districts, as arrangement which the Local Government Board declined to sanction. Subsequently the Local Government Board were further approached upon the subject.—The Chairman read a letter from Mr. Preston Thomas, the Local Government Inspector, dated July 27th, in which G. Cook said he looked upon the election as a stolen one, no notice having been given, and he would hold in his hand a petition against it, believing it impossible for one Relieving Officer to do all the work.—The Chairman having explained that the position of £1,200 a year was a consolidation of the position of K.S. Board, mistress, matron of Unions, with the areas and populations, where only one Relieving Officer was appointed.—Mr. S. B. Wilson said he had the Chairman's letter, but should stick to their guns at least for 12 months, for which period the officer was elected.—Mr. Cook said

QUESTION OF ECONOMY WOULD NOT HOLD GOOD.

This opinion was endorsed by Mr. Etheridge.—Rev. F. French could not understand the dispensing idea, proposing to rescind the former resolution.—The Inspector having arrived, the Chairman said the population of Hoxne was 7,000, and the rateable value £21,000, and he thought the estimate was excessive, but would allow Mr. Cornish to prove for £2350. With regard to money the bankrupt had had to find £1,200 of what was due to the estate, when it was being financed practically by Mr. Cornish, his House would allow him to prove for £536. MORE SCHOOL ACCOMMODATION AT IPSWICH.

LAYING OF MEMORIAL STONES.

On Monday afternoon the memorial stone was laid by Mr. A. C. Ridley of the Baptist Schools in connection with the Burlington Chapel. This gentleman gave an explanation of the object of the gathering, and I would appear from him that the building is an addition to the existing schoolroom, being intended as an infants' school and class-rooms. It is connected with the old room by a corridor and staircase. The plans in use approached the new infants' schoolroom—a commodious room 25ft. by 20ft., also approached from the Burlington Chapel—and obtained access for the purpose of tea and other social meetings. Upstairs is a ladies' room, 22ft. by 16ft., from which access is obtained to the new gallery at the old staircase, which has been reopened. On opening the revolving shutters and taking in part of the old gallery, the room would be increased by 16ft. by 16ft.—very useful in case of public meetings or lectures, and on closing the shutters it is converted into three classrooms for senior scholars, each 16ft. by 12ft., ventilated, and excellently lighted with gas. The entrance will be from London Road, which will be faced with stone and brick, in the style of the old building, and will be under the contract price for the building is £1,175. The plans, which were prepared with a view of obtaining the best possible result, were got out by Messrs. Eade and Johns, and Mr. E. Catchpole is the builder.

Mr. Ridley, in laying the memorial stone, remarked would be capable, he said, of holding over 100 children, and the advantage of the classrooms would be that each class could be taught in different directions. There would be ample kitchen accommodation, and when completed, the building would be in every sense well adapted for the purposes for which it was intended, and the requirements of the school for many years. The subject of enlarged school accommodation had for some years been a matter of much anxiety by the teachers and the other officers of the school, and it was owing to their tenacity and perseverance that such a satisfactory result had been made towards finding the necessary funds. Referring to the importance and

and the success which had been made in the Ipswich Sunday School Union, Mr. Ridley said that ten years before there were 4,000 names on the books, while to-day there were 615, showing an increase of over 25 per cent. In concluding, Mr. Ridley referred to the work of the late Rev. Thomas Medhurst, who had been made on the memorial stone of the distinction conferred on their pastor by his appointment for the year 1893-94 as President of the Baptist Union. The paper (Rev. T. M. Morris) gave a statement of the financial position, in which he stated that up to the present they had raised £1,000, and he pointed out that if the salaries were reduced the grant from the Consolidated Fund would be reduced by £500. Mr. Inspector Mr. Thirkettle, the relieving officer, said he had 23 stations, and he believed he could carry out the duties with the help of a superannuated officer as assistant. The Chairman pointed out to the Inspector that the late officer lived over seven miles from the last stipulated station (Stradbroke), and in urgent cases the Overseers had power to act.—The Rev. B. G. Gorton said this

ECONOMY WAS AGAINST EFFICIENCY.

(No.) As one of the largest ratepayers, he would prefer to pay more rates than have the poor ill-used, and the poor should not be properly looked after.—Mr. Etheridge said the economy would mean more expenditure by the ratepayers in the future, owing to the officer to sift the cases.—The Inspector said he agreed with the remarks of Mr. Gorton.—The Rev. F. French took exception to the remarks of the Inspector, saying he thought he was coming to bless, but it appeared he would recommend to the Local Government Board the views of the majority of the Board. He did not see how they could make it an experiment. He suggested that an informal vote be taken, but this course did not meet with the approval of the Board.

ASLEEP FOR TWELVE YEARS.

A MODERN RIP VAN WINKLE.

AN EXTRAORDINARY STORY.

A REMARKABLE PATHOLOGICAL MYSTERY.

The little village of Thöelles, not far from Saint-Quentin, is just now in a state of commotion caused by the supposed miraculous sleep of a young girl, Marguerite Bouyeval, who has been asleep for twelve years. Throughout the country-side and in Paris and many of the stories told about her. Alighting at the nearest railway station, one of the visitors asked an old peasant the way to Thöelles. MASTER OF HIS OWN HOUSE.

Sir,—What is this nonsense about women refusing to obey their husbands? The only way with wives is to be gentle with them, but at the same time perfectly firm. This is my way, and I find it answers admirably. My wife the other day declined to surrender the morning paper to me, and told me she would like to be a "new woman." "Why?" I asked. MUSIC AND DRAMA IN SUFFOLK.

A return visit of "Niobe" (all smiles) is announced for next week. It is now eight months since this charming mythological comedy, by Messrs. Harry and Edward Poulton, was introduced to the laughter-loving audiences of Ipswich. The time machine it has completed a consecutive run of 550 performances at the Strand Theatre, London, and is now touring under Mr. Willie Edouin's direction. It is still on its tour of the principal towns of the United Kingdom.

The legend from which the idea of the play has been taken is as follows:—Niobe, on the authority of the Mythological Legends, was the wife of Amphion, King of Thebes, who flourished long before the Trojan War. She had fourteen children, seven sons and seven daughters, and in an excess of maternal pride, to have taunted the goddess Latona, who had but two children. Apollo, the style of the old legends, were got out by Messrs. Eade and Johns, and Mr. E. Catchpole is the builder.

Question of economy would not hold good. This opinion was endorsed by Mr. Etheridge.—Rev. F. French could not understand the dispensing idea, proposing to rescind the former resolution.—The Inspector having arrived, the Chairman said the population of Hoxne was 7,000, and the rateable value £21,000, and he thought the estimate was excessive, but would allow Mr. Cornish to prove for £2350. With regard to money the bankrupt had had to find £1,200 of what was due to the estate, when it was being financed practically by Mr. Cornish, his House would allow him to prove for £536. This claim was, however, not to be allowed against the present estate. Hence Mr. Cornish will be permitted to prove for £536, with the deficiency ranking accordingly in whatever dividend is ultimately declared.

Alluding to the increased liberty given to women, she says, "The question for our consideration now is, how are we to use for the burden of their liberty," and she asks, "Are mothers preparing their children for this?" "The condition of the world at the present time, independent beings must have an important influence on the standard of morality accepted by society." "It is," she says, "not an exaggeration to say that man is what woman wishes him to be." Therefore, "women, young, middle-aged, and old should take a strong personal part in the crusade against the social evil." Above all, "they must not accept evil as a necessity."

Lady Laura Ridding spoke about factory, mill, and warehouse girls. She strongly recommended the forming of evening clubs, and suggested that there should be provided for them healthful recreation and amusement. The best clubs she knew of were those which were managed by women, and the stories told about her. Alighting at the nearest railway station, one of the visitors asked an old peasant the way to Thöelles. "Ah, Sir," he replied, "you wish to see Thöelles in the summer! The place is all roses then. Take that road on the left, and follow it till you come to a large crucifix, and there they will point out to you the thatched cottage where she is lying, but if you like I will guide you." Having accepted his offer, away we went, and on the road he began to give us his opinion of the phenomena. "It is not natural, Sir, this long sleep," he remarked. "People here don't believe in it. It is said she gets up in the night to eat. All who come to see her leave a trifle. The family live on these offerings. That

The neighbours say they have seen her get up. This is not true. The poor soul is ill, it is not natural to sleep for twelve years." At length Thöelles was reached, and in a few minutes we knocked at the cottage. A tall, gaunt, poorly-clad woman, opened the door. She was of the coarse peasant type, but not devoid of intelligence. Her features were drawn and pinched as are the most miserable cottages to be seen in the locality. On the walls were coloured prints representing the Holy Virgin and Child, and the Crucifixion, and on the tatters were strewed about. We asked her to show us Marguerite, whereupon she led us into a small room, and there on a wooden bed lay the girl, a mere skeleton whose eyes were closed, and whose face was of death-like paleness. The sight was appalling. Overcome with emotion we crossed ourselves and touched her forehead the cold sensation of death crept over us. Marguerite's body was covered with a single sheet, the sheets and disclosed to us a little emaciated arm formed of skin and bone only. Curious to say, on raising the sheet the body was found to be clothed in fl

NEXT YEAR'S PROSPECTS.

THE NEWSPAPER FOLLOW AND.

[By Our Special Correspondent.]

There is not much to complain of in respect to the weather this autumn. It partakes, perhaps, much of the character of the summer in being a little showery, one day so warm for getting about" with anything like comfort is difficult, and the next day so cold that a good warm overcoat is acceptable. Still the autumnal work of the farm goes on very satisfactorily, and if the roots are not so big as was at one time anticipated, yet there are plenty of them, and other food for stock during the coming winter is abundant. The present prices of wheat and other corn take away much of the pleasure of the harvest attending the preparation for next year's crops. It requires a good deal of planning and scheming to know what is best to be done in the circumstances in which the great majority of agriculturists find themselves. Ironbine many gentlemen will fight shy of wheat. An Essex friend of mine, who farms pretty largely, grew only a very few acres of wheat last year—just enough for straw, and he is thanking his lucky stars he did not, as things have turned out. There will probably be very grown all over the country. Can wheat possibly be lower than it is at the present time? It is not safe to say what may happen after what has happened. But that wheat will be lower than ever it was attention is being drawn to the enormous profits the millers and bakers are making. A little newspaper warfare is going on locally on the subject, a dispute having arisen as to the quantity of flour which can be produced from a given quantity of wheat. Into these details I do not enter—this is a practical or professional point which millers and bakers can be best left to settle, but it would seem that we have here another instance of "somebody" running away with profits, some of which ought to go into the pockets of the original producers. It seems almost as if the farmers should be so entirely at the mercy of the middleman as they are at present. The people I have to entertain the notion that farmers might be in a more independent position in this respect than they are, that they might grind the corn they grow, sell the flour they grow in one form or another, and sell other things the result of which would be to place them in a far more independent position than they are at the present time. This is all very well, but people who say such things are not practical men, and there is no doubt that more of this sort of thing might be done by smaller farmers than is now the case. I had a little conversation with a friend this week, and as he was a practical miller of some little standing I asked him to hold a special interest to me anent the correspondence to which I have referred in reference to the quantity of flour to be made out of a given quantity of wheat. His experience, I found, was entirely confined to grinding wheat into flour—that is, he had no knowledge of or acquaintance with the roller process. I am not, of course, responsible for his opinions or his "facts," but as far as my memory will serve me, what he said in effect was that six bushels of wheat of 10 stones to the coomb would make a sack of flour. The cost of six bushels of wheat at present prices would be 15s. The usual charge by millers for grinding and dressing wheat into flour is 6d. per sack

At a meeting of the Fife Miners' Wages Committee on Friday, at Dunfermline, reports were submitted from the various districts as to whether the strike should be resumed or not. It was believed a majority in favour of resuming work on Monday, and the Committee decided to arrange a meeting between a few of the coal masters and the miners' officials. The miners, however, are aware that the masters may refuse to attend the meeting, in which case the strike may be continued.

The Pall Mall Gazette last night, commenting on the last meeting of the Cabinet, says it cannot be overlooked that the departure of Lord Kimberley from Downing Street on the day after the Cabinet meeting has continued silence on him and the fact that Lord Rosebery, and not Lord Kimberley conducted the business at the Foreign Office during the greater part of last week, have combined to excite most sinister rumours in and about the public offices. There is no explanation of Lord Kimberley's absence from his post at the time when despatches of most pressing concern were being sent and received, and it is not to be wondered at if the impression prevails that upon it, even to the circulation of the persistent statement that grave differences of opinion existed between the Cabinet Council between the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister, having relation to the initiation of the proposals made to the respective Powers.

Preston-Thomas, an inspector of the Local Government Board, held an inquiry at the Town Hall, Ipswich, into the circumstances attending the death of James MacDermott, an army pensioner, who died in Ipswich Workhouse a fortnight ago under singular circumstances already fully reported in our columns. All the witnesses previously examined were recapitulated by the witnesses called before the Borough Coroner; while an inmate named Burgess confirmed to a great extent the Police Officer during the greater part of last week, have combined to excite most sinister rumours in and about the public offices. There is no explanation of Lord Kimberley's absence from his post at the time when despatches of most pressing concern were being sent and received, and it is not to be wondered at if the impression prevails that upon it, even to the circulation of the persistent statement that grave differences of opinion existed between the Cabinet Council between the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister, having relation to the initiation of the proposals made to the respective Powers.

A shocking occurrence was witnessed on Thursday afternoon on the Quantock Estate, near Bridgewater, the residence of Mr. E. J.
